

Alcohol problems are common

Never feel you're alone. 2 in 5 men and 1 in 7 women in Scotland drink at levels hazardous to health. Tens of thousands of people – friends, family members and co-workers – are negatively affected by someone else's drinking.

Believe change is possible

Many people recover from alcohol problems. The first step is to admit that there is a problem. This can be difficult but there are services throughout Scotland that can help. Some of their staff will have overcome similar problems themselves.

Try to cut down

If you can, cut down to the sensible limit. It can be hard to know exactly how much we're drinking so consider keeping a drinking diary.

Find a healthier balance

Cutting down benefits health, reduces stress, improves sleep, promotes weight loss and can help lift feelings of depression and anxiety.

Alcohol dependence

Dependence makes it harder to change your habits. Family doctors can refer people to local services that can help. There are also many groups and projects that can give extra support to the person, their family, friends and colleagues.

Feelings and emotions

The reasons why we get into difficulties with alcohol are complex and are often bound up with our feelings about ourselves and our place in the world. Exploring and becoming more aware of our feelings and attitudes is an important part of resolving problems.

Getting help

Visit our alcohol website (address below) and look in the 'contacts directory' for details of services, supports and other helpful sites.

'My Drinking Questionnaire' – this self-assessment tool on the Alcohol website can help you decide what to do.

Self help books – look in your local library under 'Health and Personal Development'.

Support groups & services – look in Yellow Pages under 'Alcohol Misuse' or 'Counselling and Advice'.

Worried about your drinking?

Call DRINKLINE free on 0800 7 314 314 at any time. Ask about services in your area.

Call DRINKLINE to order free copies of other leaflets in this series. Topics include stress, young people, women and alcohol, healthy living and sensible drinking.

For more tips and information about alcohol, visit

www.infoscotland.com/alcohol

Recognising problem drinking

Find out how to spot a problem with alcohol and what you can do about it.

We all need at least 2 days a week without alcohol.

It's a mistake to think only alcoholics have a problem with alcohol.

If you're reading this, you're probably already concerned that you or someone you know is drinking too much.

The costs of problem drinking

Spending too much on alcohol causes financial problems for some, but if we drink too much there can be other costs to pay – in our careers, in our relationships and with our health.

What is meant by 'problem drinking'?

Problem drinking means drinking more than the sensible limits on a regular basis. Some people drink lots and appear to be fine. In truth, they won't be able to avoid problems with their health and other areas of their lives in the long term.

What are the 'sensible limits'?

Men:

No more than 3-4 units a day and no more than 21 units in one week.

Women:

No more than 2-3 units a day and no more than 14 units a week.

What's a 'unit'?

A unit equals 10ml of pure alcohol. That's the amount the body can safely get rid of in an hour.

How many units in a drink?

 35ml measure gin/rum/vodka/whisky:	1.4 units
 330ml bottle standard lager/beer:	1.7 units
 1 pint medium strength lager/beer:	2.8 units
 1 pint standard lager/beer:	2.3 units
 1 pint strong cider:	3.4 units
 700ml bottle whisky:	28 units
 275ml bottle alcopop:	1.5 units
 175ml glass standard size wine:	2.1 units
 750ml bottle wine:	9.8 units

Signs of problem drinking

Many people learn how to cover up their alcohol problems. These problems aren't always visible to others, but if we're honest with ourselves, we can spot the signs:

- not being able to socialise without a drink
- struggling at work or in education because of hangovers
- having to take 'sickies' to recover
- poor concentration
- spending lots on alcohol
- arguing with family or friends
- feeling irritable without a drink
- becoming defensive or angry when drinking habits are discussed or challenged
- feeling we need to hide some or all of our drinking from others
- drinking to get going in the morning (including 'hair of the dog')
- getting into fights or trouble with the police
- waking up with unexplained injuries or bruises
- drink driving

- drinking to get drunk
- drinking excessively at weekends and during time off
- not having days without alcohol
- starting drinking earlier in the day than previously
- gaining weight
- not being able to get pregnant
- periods becoming irregular
- problems getting or maintaining an erection
- getting into situations where your safety might be at risk
- losing control while drinking
- having sex you later regret
- not being able to remember what happened when you were drinking

If we drink more than the sensible limits and are having problems like these, there's a good chance alcohol could be to blame.

